1. All returnees [REDACTED] have been by virtue of their long uncontrolled residence and work status in the USSR in a position to acquire at least indirect information pertaining to Soviet guided missile developments. A general type of interrogation guide has been prepared to lead this type of source into revealing his knowledgeability in the missile area regardless of how indirect or vague it may appear. This type of questioning should be adopted to acquire information in this critical area. Attachment A covers the general interrogation questions.

2. Certain returnees may have missile information of a much more direct nature. These sources may have received their education in schools, academies or universities at which technical training courses applicable to the guided missile field were available. Others may have actually worked in plants at which guided missile development was being carried out. Many others could have passed known missile research and development installations, operational sites, test areas or have been in a position to observe missiles in transit. Attachment B covers the specific interrogation questions.

3. In addition to the interrogation material prepared specifically for and included in this guide, an existing collection guide previously prepared by the Guided Missiles Division, SI, is particularly well suited for use [REDACTED]. The guide referred to is SI-#901, General Guided Missile Activity Interrogation Guide.
